A Finnish couple added to their victories by winning the North American Wife Carrying Championship in Newry, Maine. Campaigns' Focus: Win the Day

Both sides emphasize small, daily victories to take White House

Washington

It can be something as small as positioning the candidate at just the right camera angle or as big as catching the opponent in a campaign-altering slip of the tongue.

Every day, the ground troops of Team Obama and Team Romney pursue a common goal: winning the day. Moment by moment, they maneuver and hustle to gain an inch here, a foot there on the opposition.

Driving it all is the belief that by stringing together enough small, daily victories, they can help their candidate win the one day that truly matters — Nov. 6, Election Day.

If they lose Monday, they will work harder to win Tuesday. If they lose Tuesday, there's always Wednesday. Until time runs out.

Each day opens with a mental push of the reset button. "It helps you get up at 5 in the morning," says Paul Begala, a Democratic consultant.

When President Barack Obama underperformed in his first debate Wednesday night, his handlers worked all the harder the next morning — in briefings, conference calls, television appearances, attack ads and more — to frame Romney's debate

Mitt Romney talks with advisers Oct. 1 while en route to Denver, where two days later, his strong performance in the first presidential debate would energize his campaign.

Obama Meets With Calif. Donors

President Barack Obama is back on top of the money race and pulling out all the stops to keep it that way. A fundraising report released Saturday showed that Obama and Democrats had raised $181 million in September after trailing Mitt Romney for most of the summer. narrative as dishonest. Republican rapid responders served up rejoinders in real time.

"We had a good week last week. ... We have to have a good week this week and the week after," Republican Party Chairman Reince Priebus said Sunday on CNN's "State of the Union." "So I think we take it one day at a time."

A jobs report Friday showing unemployment at the lowest levels of Obama's presidency was followed Saturday by a report showing Obama had raised $181 million in September, seemingly giving his campaign a boost over the weekend.

In theory, the moment-by-moment activity is supposed to reinforce the candidates' message to voters. But there's a risk that campaigns can get so caught up in the day-to-day that they lose sight of the big picture.

So Romney senior strategist Stuart Stevens preaches the long view. He's been known to remind staffers that "the key is winning the election, not winning the day." NANCY BENAC (AP)

Shortage in Calif. Fuels Record-High Gas Prices

Los Angeles

California motorists faced another day of record-breaking gasoline prices Sunday, though relief appeared to be on the way.

In its latest update early Sunday, AAA reported that the statewide average price for a gallon of regular unleaded gasoline was $4.66. Saturday's average of $4.61 was the highest since June 19, 2008, when it was a tad less than $4.61.

Sunday's price, like Saturday's, was the highest in the nation, with the Golden State overtaking Hawaii as the state with the priciest fuel. A station in Long Beach had California's priciest gas at $6.65 for a gallon of regular, according to Gasbuddy.com. Customers at an outlet in San Pablo paid just $3.49, the low-

Divided Venezuela Heads to Polls

Voters cast ballots in Chavez's closest presidential race yet

Caracas, Venezuela

President Hugo Chavez's crusade to transform Venezuela into a socialist state, which has bitterly divided the nation, was put to the stiffest electoral test of his nearly 14 years in power Sunday in a closely fought presidential election.

Both camps said turnout was high, with millions of Venezuelans casting ballots. Long lines formed at many polling centers, with lines of hundreds of voters snaking along sidewalks and around blocks in many parts of Caracas.

Chavez's challenger, Henrique Capriles, has united the opposition in a contest between two sides that distrust each other so deeply there were concerns whether a close election result would be respected.

Venezuelans Vote in U.S.

Thousands of U.S.-based Venezuelans, including Ciria Rodriguez of Miami, left, flocked to New Orleans by bus, car and airplane to vote in Sunday's presidential election. Most Venezuelan voters in the U.S. live in the Miami area, and the vast majority of those are critical of Hugo Chavez's government.

"We will recognize the results, whatever they are," Chavez told reporters after casting his vote in Caracas.

The stakes couldn't be higher. If Chavez wins a new six-year term, he gets a free hand to push for an even bigger state role in the economy, further limit dissent and continue to befriend rivals of the U.S.

Venezuelan presidential candidate Henrique Capriles, 40, a former state governor, says he is center-left.

With a Capriles win, an abrupt foreign policy shift can be expected, along with a loosening of state economic controls and an increase in private investment. A tense transition would likely follow until the January inauguration because Chavez's political machine controls the wheels of government.

Antonio Padron, a Chavez supporter, predicted a close finish: "It's a tough fight. The opposition has never been this strong."

Other Venezuelans feared what might happen if disputes erupt over the vote's outcome.

Political analyst Ricardo Sucre said he expected the election to show "two halves, more or less even." Regardless of the result, he said, Venezuelans are likely to remain deeply divided by politics for years to come. IAN JAMES (AP)

Philippines, Rebels OK Peace Deal

Manila, Philippines

Philippine President Benigno Aquino III announced Sunday that his government has reached a preliminary peace deal with the nation's largest Muslim rebel group in a major breakthrough toward ending a decades-long insurgency.

Aquino said the "framework agreement" — a roadmap for a new autonomous region for minority Muslims in the predominantly Roman Catholic nation's south — was an assurance the Moro Islamic Liberation Front will no longer aim to secede.

The agreement, to be signed Oct. 15, spells out general principles on major issues, including the extent of power and territory of the new region. A final deal could be reached by 2016, officials said.

The deal marks the most significant progress in 15 years of on-and-off negotiations with the Moro group on ending an uprising that has left more than 120,000 people dead. Western governments have long worried that rebel strongholds could become breeding grounds for al-Qaeda-linked extremists. (AP)

Feds Craft Safety Rules

Officials want uniform standards for rail systems across U.S.

Washington

Federal officials have begun drafting safety standards for the nation's subway and light-rail systems, three years after the deadly Red Line crash exposed vast gaps in oversight of trains that transport millions of people a day.

The Transportation Department has long regulated safety for airlines and Amtrak, but it had no authority to impose safety standards for subway and light-rail systems. The result, federal officials said, was a patchwork of rules and regulations covering systems from San Francisco to Washington.

Now, the U.S. government is carving out a bigger role in the safety of such systems. In the summer, Congress approved a measure expanding the authority of the Federal Transit Administration and strengthening the role of state monitoring agencies such as the Tri-state Oversight Committee, the official safety monitor for the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority.

"These first-ever federal safety standards will ensure we can bring the full force of our national transit expertise to help promote a culture of safety on our nation's rail-transit systems," said Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., who led the push for federal oversight along with Rep.

JAMES M. THREHER/TWP

The push for federal oversight was prompted partly by the 2009 Red Line crash.

A Bigger Role

In the three years since the Red Line crash, regional leaders have taken steps to strengthen the role of the Tri-state Oversight Committee, which has three full-time staff members, a website and an office. The region's three top transportation officials meet quarterly to discuss Metro-related issues. (TWP)

Donna Edwards, D-Md.

"My promises made are promises kept," Mikulski said. "I will not rest until Metro is safe for those who work on it and those who ride on it."

Federal officials met last month in the District to discuss the new rules, which will take several months to write. At a minimum, transit agencies will be required to have strategies for identifying safety risks, employ a trained safety officer who reports directly to the head of the transit agency and have training programs for employees responsible for safety.

The push for federal oversight was prompted in part by the growing number of derailments, collisions and worker fatalities on subways — notably the 2009 Red Line crash that killed nine people and injured more than 80 others.

2 Plead Guilty in '11 Killing on Metrobus

Washington

Two District of Columbia men have pleaded guilty to shooting and killing a Metrobus rider last year.

The U.S. Attorney's office says 24-year-old Delron Atchison of Northeast Washington and 22-year-old Vincent Gray of Southeast Washington pleaded guilty Friday to second-degree murder.

Atchison also pleaded guilty to assault charges relating to three bus passengers seated near the man the pair targeted.

Authorities say 22-year-old Demetrius Thompson of Washington was killed in the incident Oct. 20, 2011.

The two men fought with the victim and boarded the bus around midnight.

According to prosecutors, Atchison pulled out a handgun and shot Thompson twice.

The shooting was caught on security video. The two suspects were arrested five days later in Orlando, Fla. They are scheduled to be sentenced Dec. 14. (AP)

Grills and lawn mowers: Stores stock up on grills and lawn mowers in the summer and discount them when the temperature starts to drop. October is the best month

Pony Up

So, your kid wants a pony for Christmas, right? If you're ever going to make that large purchase, experts suggest buying horses after summer, when current owners dread the expense of boarding horses all winter. Many horses also lose their value after racing season, so if you're in the market for Black Beauty, October is the time to find a deal. (No, we're not joking.) (TWP)

to get outdoor appliances on sale — and you may have some Indian summer days to use them.

End of Season

Bicycles: New models are released this time of year, which means you can get great deals on old models when stores are clearing out their inventory. Look for a good deal on last year's model.

Cars: Because most car companies release their new models at the end of summer, many dealerships will have sales for the next few months to make way for the 2013 inventory.

Pre-Holiday Sales

Toys: According to Consumer Reports, October and November are great times to pick up toys — particularly generic puzzles and games — because retailers are pushing out old toys to make room for this year's LeapFrog tablet and new gizmos.

TVs, cameras and camcorders: While November is prime season for electronics because of Black Friday and Cyber Monday, many companies release new models in September and October to keep up with demand. KATHERINE BOYLE (THE WASHINGTON POST)

The Nationals Strike First

Moore delivers the big hit to key Game 1 victory over the Cardinals

The Nationals

The 79-year wait may not have been long enough for the nation's capital to adequately prepare for the frayed nerves and frustration, for the manic, heart-in-your-throat reality of playoff baseball. The Nationals took the city on a seventh-month-long joyride, and on Sunday, in one

W 3 sun-drenched afternoon at Busch Stadium, they dragged it through a meat grinder. At least they made it worth it.

StL 2 The Nationals landed the opening blow of the National League Division Series with their 3-2 victory over the defending champion St. Louis Cardinals. The Nationals could not have played worse, and they could not have felt better about it. They possess neither the history nor the October-tested experience of the Cardinals, but rookie pinch-hitter Tyler Moore showed how irrelevant that can become on the field. Moore started his season at Class AAA Syracuse. Sunday afternoon, after loopy twists and maddening turns, he delivered the game-winning, two-out, two-run, pinch-hit single in the eighth inning that gave the Nationals their first-ever playoff win in their first-ever playoff game.

Don't worry about your heart. This can only last a month. And if it did not burst through your chest Sunday, when will it? Gio Gonzalez, the Nationals' ace, walked seven batters. Their highest-paid player, Jayson Werth, twice struck out to leave the bases loaded. The opposing starter, Adam Wainwright, struck out 10 in 5 $\frac{2}{3}$ innings, taking advantage of the shadows that crisscrossed the infield.

When Drew Storen struck out Matt Holliday with a slider to end it, the crowd filed out solemnly, in disbelief.

The Nationals still trailed only 2-1 after seven innings because of Ryan Mattheus' miracle escape in the seventh and Werth's miraculous catch to rob a two-run homer in the sixth. And Gonzalez, despite the career-high seven walks, allowed only one hit and managed to keep the Nationals within striking distance.

The wildness and wasted chances and key plays all led to the top of the eighth inning. Michael Morse reached against reliever Mitchell Boggs on shortstop Pete Kozma's error. Ian Desmond laced his third hit of the game, a single to right field that pushed Morse to third base.

Up came Danny Espinosa, who had struck out in his first three plate appearances. He may have revealed his waning confidence by bunting, even with the slow-footed Morse on third. Desmond moved up to second, though, for Kurt Suzuki. Boggs struck him out on a 97-mph fastball.

Manager Davey Johnson, the 69-year-old managing his first postseason game in 15 years, sent left-hander Chad Tracy to pinch-hit. Rookie manager Mike Matheny countered by calling on Marc Rzepczynski, his only left-handed reliever. Johnson responded by pulling back Tracy and sending up Moore, the rookie who had a 10-homer season in limited time.

Moore fell behind and ran the count to 2-2. The Mississippi native reduces hitting to its simplest form — see the ball, swing hard. Rzepczynski fed him a 93-mph fastball on the outside corner, and he flared into right field. Both Morse and Desmond trotted home, and the Nationals led, 3-2.

Since having Tommy John surgery in August 2009, Zimmermann is 21-21 with an ERA under 3.20 in 65 starts. Garcia went 4-2 with a 2.82 ERA and didn't allow a homer in nine starts at Busch Stadium. (AP)

Roster Moves

The Nationals did not include pitcher Stephen Strasburg on the roster as expected for the NL Division Series against the St. Louis Cardinals. Strasburg's season was cut short due to an innings limit, but manager Davey Johnson had joked about Strasburg serving as a pinch hitter. Other Nationals not included: infielder Mark DeRosa and lefty John Lannan, who filled in for Strasburg late in the season. (AP)

Redskins Suffer Knockout Blow

RGIII leaves with a concussion in home loss to the Falcons

Robert Griffin III isn't the type of quarterback to run out of bounds, and Sean Weatherspoon knew it. The Atlanta Falcons linebacker kept up the pursuit and went for the tackle. His upper body rammed into the helmet of the rookie, who doesn't shy from contact.

Griffin was down and done. The diagnosis was a mild concussion, according to Redskins coach Mike Shanahan.

When he was questioned within minutes after the hit, Griffin didn't know what the score was or what quarter it was, Shanahan said.

"Most quarterbacks would probably slide out of bounds or run out of bounds, but he's a tough guy," Weatherspoon said of Griffin.

Atlanta quarterback Matt Ryan went on to lead three scoring drives in the fourth quarter Sunday, scraping together enough points for a 24-17 win that gave the Falcons their first 5-0 start in franchise history.

On a day when the Falcons' usually powerful offense was a bit out of sync, the defense had made a play that changed the game. And there was no dispute. It was a clean hit.

The play turned a third-and-goal from the 3 to a fourth-and-goal from the 5 late in the third quarter. The Redskins then kicked a field goal to take a 10-7 lead, and Redskins quarterback Robert Griffin III takes a big hit in the third quarter on Sunday. Griffin was diagnosed with a concussion.

BEST CALL: The Redskins made Alfred Morris a featured player in the offense, which worked out. Not only did he run, but he also caught some balls to make an impact.

WORST CALL: From the 5-yard line in the third quarter, the Redskins ran a direct snap to Alfred Morris that went nowhere. Unnecessarily tricky. The next play, RGIII was hurt.

WORST ADJUSTMENT: Third downs were a problem all day. Even Shanahan admitted that the team's 1-for-9 conversion rate was awful.

D The Redskins still haven't won a game at home since Week 2 of last year. Pathetic.

Off Target Again

Redskins kicker Billy Cundiff saved his job last week by making a game-winning 41-yard field goal in Tampa. He may not be as lucky this week after he missed a 31-yard try in the Redskins' 24-17 loss to the Falcons. Coach Mike Shanahan called the miss "disappointing" but did not commit to bringing in competition to practice this week. Cundiff was signed in the offseason after he missed the deciding field goal for the Ravens in last season's AFC championship against the Patriots. (EXPRESS)

Griffin's replacement, fellow rookie Kirk Cousins, managed one big play in his NFL debut that put Washington in front one more time in the fourth quarter. Otherwise, the post-Griffin portion of the game belonged to the Falcons.

The Redskins (2-3), losing their eighth consecutive home game, were left to deal with an ironic wound. There had been abundant concern that Griffin was susceptible to injury when he was taking hard hits while running option plays frequently in his first three games.

But Griffin didn't have a designed run play Sunday. He ended up getting hurt while scrambling because he couldn't find an open receiver — something that every quarterback does.

Team spokesman Tony Wyllie said the Heisman Trophy winner will be evaluated again Monday.

"Thank you for all the prayers & support I'm ok," Griffin tweeted Sunday night, "and I think after all the testing I will play next week."

A dropped fly, two wild pitches and a little smooch for the baseball by a relieved reliever. Then Don Kelly brought it all to an end with a simple fly ball.

Kelly scored the tying run on a wild pitch in the eighth inning, then hit a bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the bottom of the ninth that lifted the Detroit Tigers over the Oakland Athletics 5-4 on Sunday for a 2-0 lead in their AL play-off series.

"Was looking for a fastball and I got it," Kelly said. "It's a great feeling. To be able to go out there in that situation and do that."

Detroit will go for a sweep of the division series matchup in Game 3 on Tuesday at Oakland.

"We just need to win a game," Oakland manager Bob Melvin said.

A Different Spotlight

Ben Affleck has become a director first and actor second as 'Argo' expands his filmmaking pedigree

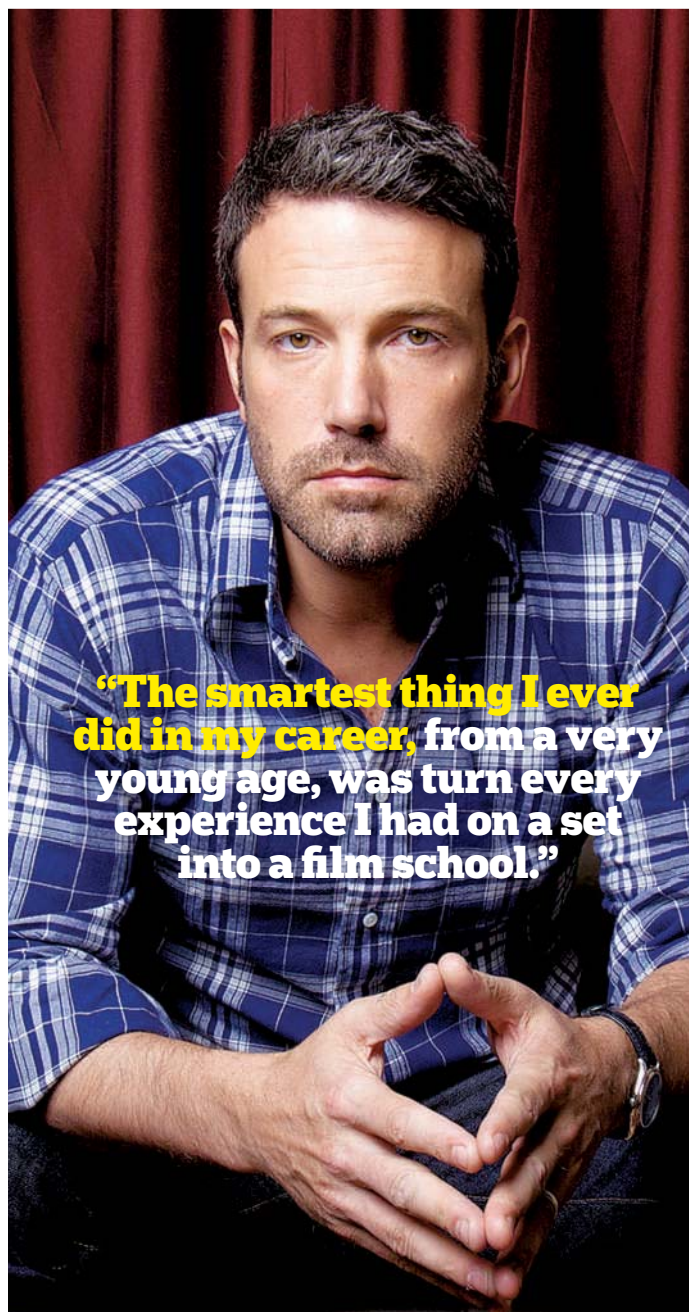

Personalities

And to think it all started with Ben-nifer.

Like almost every actor, Ben Affleck had always wanted to direct. But in 2003, when Affleck was romantically linked to Jennifer Lopez, he decided to finally take the plunge. The movie Affleck and Lopez starred in together, "Gigli," had come out to savage reviews and public ridicule, and the paparazzi's interest in the couple's engagement was obsessive, intrusive and constant.

"I just thought: 'This is so gross. It's destructive to my career, it's destructive to my soul, to my everything; I want to escape this,'" Affleck recalls. "I thought, I've been wanting to direct for so long, if there's ever going to be a moment to take two years away from acting and shoot and release [a movie], this is the time."

A few years later, Affleck released "Gone Baby Gone," his adaptation of a Dennis Lehane novel that shocked critics and filmgoers alike with its astute sense of atmosphere, pacing and characterization. Affleck followed up that promising debut with "The Town," a crime thriller set, like "Gone Baby Gone," in Boston near where he grew up. The movie found Affleck upping his game as a filmmaker with a larger-scale story and explosive action. This week, he'll come out with his third film, "Argo," a political thriller he co-stars in that was an instant hit when it played the Telluride and Toronto film

"The smartest thing I ever did in my career, from a very young age, was turn every experience I had on a set into a film school."

What's Next

Affleck On-Screen

Near-unrecognizable with shaggy hair and a beard in "Argo," Ben Affleck will be seen next year in Terrence Malick's romantic reverie "To the Wonder," as well as the crime drama "Runner, Runner." He's not sure what he'll direct next, but he hopes that a Matt Damon-Affleck movie about Boston crime boss Whitey Bulger comes to fruition. (TWP) festivals earlier this year.

"Argo," based on the real-life story of a mission to rescue six American diplomats from Tehran at the height of the Iran hostage crisis in 1980, has earned plaudits not only as the kind of smart, classy good-story-well-told that Hollywood has otherwise bailed on in recent years, but also as a noteworthy advance for Affleck. Tonally and technically more complex than anything he's done, "Argo" is garnering talk of Oscar nominations — not just for best picture, but also for Affleck as best director.

It's hard to believe that film fans have a celebrity media feeding frenzy to thank for liberating a director whose taste, chops and unfussy visual approach recall the great naturalistic films of the 1970s.

"That span kind of saved my creative heart," Affleck says, reflecting on the period between 2004 and 2006 when he was developing and directing "Gone Baby Gone." "It kept me interested creatively in a business that was turning me off completely otherwise. And totally reinvigorated me and inspired me."

'Price' Change: A Boston man won an online competition to become the first male model in "The Price Is Right" history. The CBS game show, which has been on the air since 1972, said Friday that viewers had chosen Rob Wilson, left, from among a trio of finalists. Wilson begins his weeklong stint alongside the ladies Oct. 15. A 'Big' Presence

'Sex and the City's' Chris Noth takes on another towering TV part: J.P. Morgan

Personalities

ENCORE 8:00 The man widely known as "Big" gets even bigger: He's playing J.P. Morgan, one of history's towering business magnates.

It was one of Morgan's businesses that funded the Titanic, and Chris Noth appears in a supporting role in "Titanic: Blood and Steel," an epic 12-part miniseries about the building of the great ship. It premieres on six consecutive nights, with two episodes airing back to back, beginning at 8 p.m. Monday on the Encore cable network.

Noth says the idea of playing Morgan intrigued him.

"He's sort of maligned today," Noth says. "But two times in our history he saved our banking system from falling apart and saved the country from bankruptcy and depression. He was a patriotic man. But he liked to make money, too."

"It was fun to come into this film and remind people whose wallet it was that was building the Titanic," Noth says.

Everyone knows the resulting tragedy. But that familiar outcome looms just beyond the final fade-out of "Titanic: Blood and Steel," itself the largely untold story of how the ship came to be.

Even before J.P. Morgan, Noth has made a TV specialty of important-guy roles that don't necessarily claim lots of screen time. He was the intermittently seen but somehow ever-present Big on HBO's "Sex and the City."

And now he's starting his fourth season as Peter Florrick, a powerful politician on "The Good Wife."

"At this point in my life, I like the security of a job," says the 57-year-old, "while still having time for my young son and to pursue other creative work." FRAZIER MOORE (AP)

Study: Rise in Gay Roles on TV

The number of LGBT characters is at its highest-ever level

Television

The number of gay and bisexual characters on scripted broadcast network TV is at its highest-ever level in the season ahead, according to the Gay & Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation. The total on cable television is also going up.

Of the 701 series regulars on 97 scripted TV shows set to air this season, 31 of them are LGBT roles.

The 17th annual "Where We Are on TV" report, released Friday, found that 4.4 percent of actors appearing regularly on prime-time network drama and comedy series during the 2012-13 season will portray lesbian, gay, bisexual or transgender characters. That is up from 2.9 percent in 2011, which saw a dip in what had been a growing annual trend.

The study reviewed 97 scripted TV programs scheduled to air in the upcoming season on the broadcast networks, counting a total of 701 series regular characters; 31 of them are LGBT characters.

ABC has the highest amount, with 10 out of 194, or 5.2 percent.

Fox ranks second with six LGBT characters out of 118 total series regulars, or 5.1 percent.

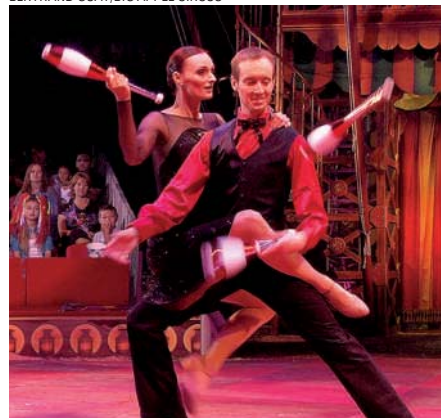

CBS was saluted as much improved, with four out of 142 LGBT series regulars, or 2.8 percent, up from 0.7 percent last year.

Regular gay and lesbian characters on what the study termed "mainstream" cable television has also risen this season to 35, up from 29 last season. FRAZIER MOORE (AP)

When it works, "Mortified" avoids the pitfalls of most talk shows, where guests offer glib remarks about their weekend before launching into obligatory plugs for the next movie, book or album. By keeping the focus on childhood embarrassments and mishaps, "Mortified" dwells in the awkward democracy of junior high school, a place where even those future celebrities felt miserable.

HOW HE PROPOSED: He sent her an email from a website (he'd made) called Arlington Treasure Hunt that made it look like she'd win an iPad if she followed emailed clues. At the Iwo Jima Memorial, the final email said, "Rachel, Dave has a question for you."

MOST STUPID FIGHT: On a tubing trip, they stopped for lunch, and he offered her his Butterfinger. "She said yes. I wasn't expecting that and didn't want to actually give it to her."

MAKING IT UNIQUE: Because of the venue, every guest's vehicle will be searched upon arrival.

WITH INFINITE FUNDS: Dave would commission a bear-shaped ice sculpture.

B.I.O.

By Invitation Only If you'd like to see your wedding or commitment ceremony in B.I.O., send your favorite informal photograph (wacky is fine, but please don't send a formal engagement shot), plus your names and ceremony date to weddings@readexpress.com. Please contact us at least one month before your wedding. We'll get back to you with questions.

The happy hour that's worth calling in sick the next day for.

“So I’m in the train station minding my own business and Jay Z walks by. Wtf.”

— @RAREUNLIMITED ON INSTAGRAM.COM was stunned to see the rap superstar on the subway. He took the train to his last show at the newly opened Barclays Center in Brooklyn this weekend.

“The Jon Stewart-Bill O’Reilly face-off went about exactly as planned: Two extremely adept political entertainers delivered a show that was much more entertaining than anything we ever see from actual politicians.”

— PETER KAFKA AT ALLTHINGS.D.COM offers his review of Bill O’Reilly and Jon Stewart’s face-off, dubbed “The Rumble in the Air-Conditioned Auditorium,” at GWU’s Lisner Auditorium on Saturday.

“3-on-1 fastbreaks usually have you excited with anticipation. But when it’s #wizards-bobcats, the results have the potential for comedy.”

— @MRMICHAELLEE of The Washington Post remarks while covering the NBA preseason game in Charlotte on Sunday afternoon.

“Hear that, faithful readers? You’ll just have to deal with your own [expletive] bedtime stories, probably about princesses and princes having chaste liaisons in vaguely enchanted dells watched over by a sorcerer whose magic seeps through the plot holes in your amateurish narratives.”

— DOUG BARRY AT JEZEBEL.COM points out that although J.K. Rowling says she’ll write another children’s book, she won’t be publishing the bedtime stories she makes up and tells to her kids at night.

“The Big Bird bit wasn’t as funny as we were hoping it would be when he first came out on the Update set, but then again – he is a beloved children’s character and he can’t exactly come out and say outrageous things. So it was cute and also just kind of awesome that Big Bird was on ‘SNL.’”

— ANDREA HEIHER AT BLOG.ZAP2IT.COM/FROM INSIDETHEBOX enjoyed the “Sesame Street” character’s appearance on the show after he was mentioned during the presidential debate Wednesday.

Horoscope

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Now is not the time to be focusing upon your own efforts, or their desired results. You must pay attention to another today.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Any promises you make will have to be kept, certainly — but you may find that you are under a time constraint as a result.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) There is a certain change coming, and you feel it in ways that cannot be easily expressed. You'll be ready, certainly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You'll have a chance to demonstrate your expertise in a field or endeavor that is somewhat unusual. Others want to be like you!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) The more organized you are, the better your day will progress — though not necessarily more swiftly. Some things just take time.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) You can increase the comfort level at home or at the workplace — but that doesn't mean you have less to do, surely!

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You may be in the mood for a celebration of sorts today, and it will be up to you to see that there is something to celebrate!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You may not think you can get everything done on time today, but once you get started your efficiency and productivity will surprise even you!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Now is not the time to feign interest in another's affairs; either you are interested or you are not — but honest feelings are called for at this time.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) The messages that are meant for you today may be sent to the wrong individuals at first, and once they get to you time is of the essence!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) What can and cannot be done today may be a matter of policy — which you can change, certainly, but it is likely to take awhile.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You are not succeeding at things as you had hoped — but you are not losing ground, either. This can be considered a positive trend.
